

The Department of History at Emory University invites applications for a two-year postdoctoral fellowship in Transnational Latin American History, beginning in Fall 2018. The Department seeks a scholar to offer courses and mentor students in the field, and whose research and teaching speak in direct ways to hemispheric, trans-Atlantic, and/or trans-Pacific histories of Latin America, broadly construed and including Latinx and Chicanx history. Themes central to the field that complement existing strengths within the History Department and Emory University include but are not limited to: race and ethnicity; gender; migration; labor; environmental history; borderlands; globalization and capitalism; empire; law; and religion. The teaching load is three courses per year and the selected applicant will receive an annual research stipend. Completion of the Ph.D. by fall 2018 is required. Please submit cv, cover letter, writing sample and sample course syllabi. Candidates may be asked to provide additional material and references at a later date, so please do not send references until requested.

The deadline for applications is April 30, 2018.

MINIMUM QUALIFICATIONS: Completion of the Ph.D. by fall 2018 is required.

Please address questions to Kelly Richmond Yates, Academic Department Administrator, at kyates2@emory.edu. Emory University, Atlanta, GA, is an Equal Opportunity/Affirmative Action/Disability/Veteran Employer.

Women and minorities are encouraged to apply.