We're hiring: Professor in the Institute of the Americas

The UCL Institute of the Americas is seeking to appoint a leading scholar with an excellent research record, an ability to provide intellectual leadership and a commitment to high-quality teaching.

www.ucl.ac.uk

The successful candidate will have an established portfolio of high-quality published work and show evidence of an ability to conduct research of international quality in the future and a successful track record of research income, with exciting and compelling plans for future grant applications. We are keen to appoint someone with the capacity to contribute an impact case study to a future Research Excellence Framework exercise.

As well as undertaking his/her/their own research, the appointee should make a significant contribution to the research and teaching culture of the Department. The successful appointee will be expected to contribute the full range of teaching, impact, and enabling within the Department commensurate with their role. There is an expectation that the appointee would be a candidate for Head of Department within a few years of taking up the post.

If you have any queries regarding the vacancy, please contact Professor Jonathan Bell at jonathan.bell@ucl.ac.uk

If you have queries regarding the application process, please contact Ruth Harper at ia-manager@ucl.ac.uk

No agencies please.

We particularly welcome female applicants and those from an ethnic minority, as they are under-represented within UCL at this level.
