OP 153. Science and technology of human and animal relationship

Thematic lines: 08. Anthropology of Science and Technology/Antropologia da Ciência e Tecnologia

The history of human beings is woven together with the relationship with animals: food, transportation, entertainment, affective, private and based on the defense of rights. The latter questions all the previous relations, considering them "utilitarists" and "specists". But the fact is that animals are present, directly or indirectly, in our daily lives and are a constituent part of the symbolic network of the different social groups with which they relate. Similarly, as already noted by anthropology, the human / animal relationship is a good starting point for thinking about the relationship of humans to each other. In this perspective this panel proposal intends to explore these multiple interactions from the point of view of slaughter animals, wild animals and the animals from a relational perspective. The objective is to contemplate the context where the meanings of these relations are constructed and how the constitution of science, as a privileged axis, participates in it. It is therefore in the interest of the panel to think of the place of science in the constitution of the different dimensions of the relationship between humans and animals and the political, cultural and economic aspects that are also part of it.
