L'architettura si adatta

The definition of strategic planning able to describe a growing hierarchy of alterations of the preexistent, to define a progression of the grades of transformation, leads to the distinction of different categories of manipulation and different operators. However, inside an urban resonable scenery as immense ruins, in which incomplete and abandoned fragments coexist, namely the refusal of the cities that is built (or tries to build itself), the ruins of the city of the story that identified in archeological sites or in the vestiges of historical monuments, as well as ruins from the late Modern, does still make sense to distinguish the project or renovation of a building from the project of the building? It is still necessary the distinction among the restorers, only guardians of the knowledge of some techniques able to scientifically solve the conflicts that every intervention of recovery involves, and creative architects.

Abandoned urban areas

In recent times the concept of a city is changing to acquire the value of a system of services linked by a network of infrastructures, not a simple settlement system, but an organized system of functions where the relationships between people, information and things become a priority. The housing decentralization and the deindustrialization have often caused an archipelago of empty urban abandoned spaces that, although belonging to the city, are no longer part of it, deprived of any form of use, are waiting for a reassignment of a role. For these areas it is indispensable to identify new potentials and modes of intervention that trigger a regeneration process and which can play a crucial role in a process that allows to pass from the marginal area to infrastructure of the system of relations between the city and neighboring urbanization, hinge of a new identity of the city.
