

Semester at Sea (operated jointly by the Institute for Shipboard Education and its university partner Colorado State University) currently is recruiting a faculty member with a focus in Tourism or Hospitality for the Spring 2020 voyage, a 1-semester appointment to teach with the onboard faculty of about 27 individuals representing a broad range of academic disciplines. Expressions of interest for subsequent semesters also are welcome.

Semester at Sea is a long-established international education program that each semester brings several hundred students on a worldwide voyage of comparative global studies, visiting 8 to 10 countries in the context of fully accredited regular course work on board the MV World Odyssey. The faculty member usually must have a PhD, a record of excellent undergraduate teaching, international interests and experience, additional relevant academic record, and commitment to being part of a living-learning community for about 105 days at sea and in port countries. The faculty member would teach 3 courses such as Principles of Tourism, Issues in International Tourism, Culinary Tourism, Food and Society; Hospitality Marketing; etc., each to a class of 20-30 students, and each course must involve some field experience in the port countries. To be available to participate in the Spring 2020 voyage, the faculty member must have approved leave from their home institution, or be emeritus faculty, or have some similar availability.

Please contact Prof. Bob Kling, RKling@ise.colostate.edu, before 1 March 2019, for the Spring 2020 voyage. For more information on Semester at Sea, see www.semesteratsea.org, and for the full job description and to enter the formal application process, go to <https://workforcenow.adp.com/mascsr/>
