Building bonds through sharing cities

Companies such as Airbnb and Uber have become ubiquitous by tapping into the potential of underused resources. Now, more governments, non-profit organisations and citizens across the world are participating in the sharing economy and even taking the lead in shaping it, with the goal of making their cities more efficient, sustainable and inclusive, and building stronger bonds within and between communities.

This month, we take a look at some innovative examples on the sharing economy from around the world.

Interview: Jürgen Bruns-Berentelg on Hamburg's urban regeneration

Hamburg, special mention of the 2018 Prize, has successfully implemented its inner city densification strategy to cater to increased demand for housing and urban mobility from its growing population. The city has also carried out experimentations on innovative urban solutions in areas such as Wilhelmsburg.

In this short interview, Prof Jürgen Bruns-Berentelg, CEO of Hafencity Hamburg GmbH, shares with us the thinking behind Hamburg's urban regeneration strategies.
