ANNUAL REPORT 2018

UN Environment Annual Report 2018: Putting the Environment at the Heart of People's Lives

UN Environment today released its 2018 Annual Report, highlighting the organization's work on issues from fighting pollution of the air and sea to helping nations meet their goals of reducing greenhouse gas emissions.

"While 2018 was a challenging year, we saw hope in growing action and global commitment to new ways of doing business that tackle the environmental challenges we face," said UN Environment Acting Executive Director Joyce Msuya. "Our role in highlighting best practices, advocating action and bringing together governments, civil society and businesses once again proved critical."

The report, released online ahead of March 2019's UN Environment Assembly, shows that the pace of action on many interlinked environmental issues is accelerating.
