

THEMATIC MEETING
ON INTERMEDIATE CITIES
CUENCA, ECUADOR
9-11 NOVEMBER

The month of October marks one year until the start of the Habitat III Conference on Housing and Sustainable Urban Development in Quito, Ecuador. In the ongoing process of drafting a New Urban Agenda, you can now add your voice in shaping future policies of the cities you live in.

In our rapidly urbanizing world, Intermediate Cities face new challenges in meeting the demands of burgeoning populations and delivery of public services. Intermediary Cities presents different opportunities and challenges than larger metropolises with regards to urban planning, management of basic water and sanitation needs, cultural heritage protection, social integration and economic development.

From now until Friday, November 6, individuals and organizations have the opportunity to contribute their input around the topic of Intermediate Cities.

During this two-week online consultation, participants are encouraged to discuss and debate the role of Intermediate Cities in the sustainable economic, social, cultural and environmental development of 'secondary' cities.

The urban dialogues on Intermediate Cities highlight both the challenges and opportunities Intermediate Cities face in terms of urban growth and renewal.
