Practical and Theoretical Issues: Integrating Urban Planning and Emergency Management

This report examines selected examples of integration between urban planning and emergency management in Australia. It seeks to identify initial issues to implementation at national and state level. Overall, this report argues that an integrated approach will require a coordinated framework at the strategic, tactical and operational levels, across functional areas and stakeholders, to establish an effective integrated governance approach that offers desired societal outcomes when faced with extreme events. To examine the challenges and opportunities of integrating and coordinating the activities of urban planning with emergency management processes this report documents and summarises key findings relating to Stage 1 of the bushfire and natural hazards cooperative research centre project
