

CONTINUE YOUR POSTGRADUATE STUDIES

AT STANFORD UNIVERSITY

Stanford | Center for
Latin American Studies

Why pursue an MA in Latin American Studies at Stanford?

- Immerse yourself in contemporary scholarly debates of the region through seminars, teaching, and mentorship by outstanding Stanford faculty and visiting professors.
- Learn Spanish as well as less commonly taught languages, including Portuguese, Nahuatl, and Quechua
- Develop research skills in advanced social science methods, design thinking, visualization, Geographic Information Systems, and the digital humanities.
- Join a lively community and a small cohort of students with a passion for the region.

This interdisciplinary, one-year graduate degree consists of a core set of courses that survey the history, politics, culture, society, environment, and ecology of the region, along with advanced language training. The program also offers a certificate in human rights in the Americas. Graduates typically go on to pursue careers in higher education, business, government, and NGOs.

Application Deadlines

Knight-Hennessey Scholars applicants: November

All other applicants: December

Joint Degree Programs

To be eligible for a dual degree program (MBA, JD, or MD), candidates must apply and be accepted independently to both programs.

Financial Aid

Several graduate fellowships are provided, including through the Knight-Hennessey Scholars program, as well as limited course assistantships.

Eligible students from Latin America and those with financial need are encouraged to apply.

For official degree requirements and approved courses, please visit clas.stanford.edu.